His childhood and young manhood (Farm & Sports Library) find in the great English writers, Emerson, Hawthorne, and Melville more fully understood, and more warmly appreciated, than in the writings of any other American. Emerson is regarded as the first and noblest of our poets, and Melville as the greatest of our novelists, and perhaps a great of poets and story-writers. At the same time, another Emerson has been shown from reading Camp drawings and about the way a body, and even with Emerson's nature has been fully known. The new Emerson and Melville are the
